“ I remember wondering, dad do you have to go? When I was a child and you were on the road.

I always missed you when you were gone, but the time you were here, I felt your love and that was always strong.

You taught me things like how to swim and ride a bike and you called me the “queen of Yahtzee” when I am sure you actually won every time. You showed me how to change the tire and the battery on my car. And then there are your bear hugs after your long trips which is another part of you that I will deeply miss.

These are just some of the memories I will hold onto forever with your humor and jokes, you thought you were so clever.

But when I was a child and you had to deliver your next load, I did not understand why my dad had to go.

I miss our phone calls while you were driving your truck and cherish the relationship we had, if even from a distance- it made my heart so glad.

Now I find myself here, a grown woman taken back because I know once again I have to let you go.

But this time is different, there are no more phone calls, games or laughs and I find myself feeling like that little girl once again- asking why my dad has to go.

But I have to remind myself that while I want you to stay here, that you leaving is best because you will no longer be suffering and with God you will rest.
